CHANCELLOR'S MESSAGE TO GRADUANDS

It is with great pleasure that I welcome you to this QUT Graduation Ceremony.

Today marks the successful completion of your university study at QUT and the transition to the next phase of your life. We congratulate you on this great achievement and acknowledge also the wonderful support provided by your family and friends, and the commitment of QUT's academic and professional staff.

QUT takes great pride in your accomplishments and strives to make its programs relevant, challenging and rigorous in order to equip graduates with the skills and knowledge they will need in the real world.

You are graduating at a time of rapid change, with 'digital disruption' transforming many jobs and industries. The key for success in this world is the kind of advanced thinking and creative and social capacities that are the benefit of a high quality university education.

Now approaching our 30th anniversary, QUT is ranked among the world's top young universities. We take pride in the fact that we place a premium on the international and national accreditation of our various professional degrees, and our graduate employment rate remains well above the national average for Australian universities.

QUT's links with industry, commerce and government – and our teaching and research excellence – are seen as a model by many other universities. We are committed to strengthening our record of quality and achievement through academic and research advances, and infrastructure improvements.

Since its establishment, QUT has graduated approximately 250 000 people. You now join them as a member of our alumni family. We encourage you to continue your relationship with QUT through the University's very active alumni network. As a member of that group, you will be able to access professional and social benefits that will help you throughout your professional life and beyond. We are always interested in our graduates' ideas and experiences and your input toward the further development of courses, teaching and mentoring is greatly valued.

On behalf of QUT Council, I congratulate you on your graduation and look forward to your continuing association with our university.

QUT ACADEMIC DRESS

The gowns and hoods worn at QUT graduation ceremonies stem from a distinctive style of academic dress which emerged in the first universities in Europe in the twelfth century. The style was influenced by the fact that masters and scholars at that time were usually members of the clergy.

For example, in 1222 at the Council of Oxford, the Archbishop of Canterbury ordered English clerics to wear the cappa clausa – a closed, flowing gown based on a lay fashion of the period. As a result, this garment came to be regarded as academic dress for university masters who, as clerics, wore it. Later, when the rule became neglected by the clergy in general, the garment was recognised as an exclusively academic one.

The pileus, a common head-dress of medieval laymen, was adopted by the Church at the Synod of Bergamo (1311) and became typical head-wear at the universities. The pileus quadratus, square cap, is today's mortar board worn by most graduates.

The hood as an academic vestment originated from the cowl worn by monks in the Middle Ages as protection against inclement European weather. It was worn over a short cape, known as a tippet, and had a tail, known as a liripipe, which was used to pull the hood over the head and wrapped around the throat to keep the hood in place. Today the tippet remains as part of the hood and, although the hood is never worn on the head, the liripipe is retained as the funnel-shaped hood.

The tradition of wearing the hood hanging down the back is said to be derived from the practice of medieval monks, many of whom were solicitors in the King's Court, who used the bag-like hanging hood as a 'contribution bowl' for clients and well-wishers.

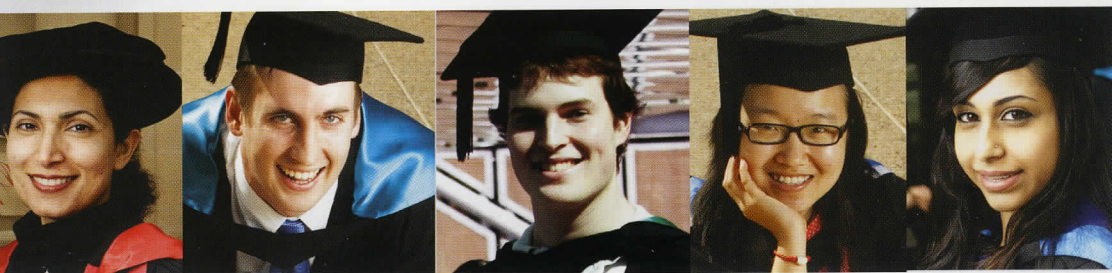

Colours have long been significant in denoting different academic disciplines and more recently, levels of scholastic achievement. Standard gowns of different shape, length and sleeve design indicate the degrees of bachelor, master and doctor. The robes of the Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor signify the office rather than the award of the wearer.

The gowns worn by the Chancellor and Vice-Chancellor of QUT retain a link with the style of academic dress in the older English universities. However, the QUT base material is a cooler wool blend rather than the traditional black silk damask or faille, and the blue colour is in keeping with the corporate identity of the university.

The embellishment used on the QUT ceremonial gowns (gold for Chancellor, silver for Vice-Chancellor) gives a distinct Queensland identity. Whereas traditional English festal robes are embellished with bullion braids in oak leaf or plate lace patterns, the Queensland floral emblem, the Cooktown Orchid, provides the theme for the QUT braids.

The braids were manufactured in Australia on computer-controlled machines. The robes and trencher caps were also made in Australia.

QUT MACE

QUT's sterling silver mace, 80 centimetres long, is of simple design. It has three sections, each symbolising the different levels of tertiary education. The knob at the base represents the bachelor's degree, the start of a professional career. The handpiece in the middle represents the masters degree. The flame-shaped head, symbolising the torch of learning, represents the doctorate. The open top acknowledges that education is an ongoing process.

In the middle ages, the mace was preferred by soldier churchmen (in particular Odo, the Bishop of Bayeux, who was the half-brother of William the Conqueror) as it was a crushing instrument which did not draw blood. Over time the mace became a symbol of authority.

The QUT mace was designed and built by Mr Alan Place, a former part-time lecturer in fine arts.

QUT LOGO

The logo builds on the strong, colloquial association between the 'QUT' initials and the name Queensland University of Technology, a name which explains the nature of QUT's business.

It is graphic, simple and timeless, reflecting QUT's commercial real-world orientation in professional courses and applied research services.

The corporate colour is blue, which supports the commercial theme.

The logo design was supervised by industrial design academic staff from QUT.
